POULTRY POINTERS.

Ducks are not easy subjects to disease. Cramps occur sometimes from cold water, and apoplexy afflicts the overfat specimens. A cold and wet duckling is likely to go into spasms. If the quarters are damp at night the ducklings are liable to leg weakness.

A Pekin duck responds readily to good treatment. They appreciate plenty of food and comfortable quarters, but they should not be fed or housed with chickens, nor in fact, with any other fowls, for they are very timid creatures and should be kept as quiet as possible.

Fowls should have empty crops in the morning, and the crops should never be quite full until it is time to go to roost at night. For the first feed, grain scattered in the litter early in the morning is preferred, the sooner the better after the birds leave the roosts.

This induces them to exercise which is especially important on cold mornings. In the middle of the day a warm, moistened mash should be given, about what they will eat within 15 or 20 minutes and at night, about an hour before they go to roost, a liberal feed of grain should be scattered in the litter.

Ducks and geese will stand rather low temperatures if they are sheltered from the wind and the floor is well bedded with clean, dry straw. They should be given their liberty whenever they choose to go outside. Their shelter should be open toward the south. A house of this style is a splendid shelter for ducks and geese and costs very little to build. The ducks and geese run together in the house except at feeding time, when the ducks are fed at a separate trough.

Quantity of grit is one of the factors in keeping turkeys healthy. If there is not sufficient grit where they range, it must be provided for them.

The rising price of eggs again reminds us how nice an abundance of winter eggs would be. The best part of it is that we can have them for a little extra trouble.

Have the sand and dry gritboxes in good shape. Hens need the dust. The sand is best for grinding and should be placed in hoppers that no dirt may become mixed with it.

The pullets that commence laying early usually continue to lay well. In this way most of the weeds can be kept out of the breeding pen.
